

Sign up for a Study at UC Berkeley today!

Researchers in the Department of Psychology at UC Berkeley are looking for participants for a memory eye tracking study. We're looking to see how your eyes can help us understand how you remember things. Volunteer today for an eye-tracking study investigating working memory development.

Eligible volunteers will receive compensation at $12/hour for a single session lasting 1-2 hours. We're looking for participants ranging from 6-25 years old. If interested, please email below and a researcher will contact you with a few preliminary questions to make sure the study would be a good fit.

Reasons it wouldn't be a good fit include: a history of head and/or eye injury, medical conditions affecting your eyes, speaking English less than 10 years, a history of any psychological or neurological disorders, or having color vision deficiency.

Please email brainlab@berkeley.edu if you are interested!

Building Blocks
of Cognition
Laboratory

